

CALL FOR PAPERS

PAPERS DUE DEC 20TH, 2021

The Michigan Journal of Political Science is an undergraduate publication originally founded in 1981 with the mission of promoting contemporary discourse in Political Science. The Journal has achieved national recognition, such as a spot on the UNESCO Top 50 Undergraduate Journals, and is affiliated with the UM Political Science Department. We have published work from students of acclaimed universities from around the world, and this year we hope to continue building recognition for our journal in extending our Call for Papers for our Fall 2021 Edition.

Our editorial board is seeking academic papers from around the world that analyze interdisciplinary concepts in Political Science. Our journal encompasses four broad sections– American Politics, International Politics, Political Theory, and Comparative Politics. Our journal hopes to publish interesting undergraduate work in Political Science amongst these categories.

If you are interested in submitting, please note that our paper requirements range from 1000–8000 words, excluding citations. Papers must be academic and argumentative in nature. The paper must have Chicago Style Citations, and must fit into one of the four sections of our journal. Papers will undergo a rigorous peer-review process led by our editorial board. If your paper is selected, you will be contacted by our editorial board to finalize your edits for publication.
